Cape Reed International is a world leader in the design, supply and construction of high-quality, sustainable timber and thatch structures with EMEA regional offices (Europe, Middle East & Africa).

The company's primary roofing material, which also gives the company its name, is cape reed (thamnochortus insignis), a unique thatching material that only grows on a small strip of land, approximately 78x23km, in the Southern Cape region of South Africa.

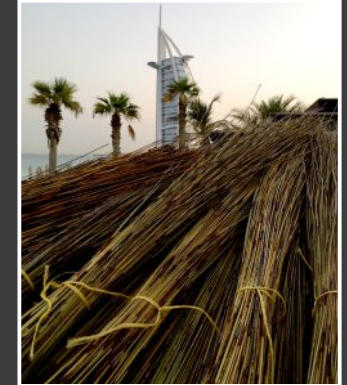

The cape reed plant grows for an average of six years before it is harvested and provides one of the most durable natural fibres on earth, making it ideal for thatching. This natural sustainable roofing material has an exceptionally high SRI (Solar Reflective Index) and unique insulating properties. A typical cape reed thatched roof structure will be 10°C cooler in summer, and warmer in winter compared to a conventional roof. Cape Reed thatched structures have a life expectancy of anything from 20 to 50 years.

Cape Reed has developed a unique fire-retardant construction method by weaving a fire-retardant cloth into the thatch as standard. The fire rating can be further enhanced with the application of Cape Reed FireShield. This internationally tested and approved chemical complies with all the relevant European Union and Dubai Civil Defence requirements and standards for construction with natural materials.

As an alternative to natural thatch, Cape Reed also offers a synthetic thatch option that closely mimics the real natural product.

Together with durable timber harvested from responsibly managed sustainable forests, Cape Reed creates bespoke structures and offers a wide range of ready-made timber products and timber material to the public.

Cape Reed has introduced rustic chic to properties from the most prestigious residential areas around the globe including villas in the Middle East, Mediterranean and Africa.
